Tre grand, igjen..

Thor-Erik Hoftaniska spilte meget pent i tre grand mot Wenche Langhaug og Svein Harald Riisnæs, men måtte ha litt hjelp for at kontrakten skulle stå, og det får man jo når man sitter i drag.

Svein Harald spilte ut hjerter to (svenske) til knekten, nieren og treeren. Det fulgte kløver konge, kløver ti til dame, ess og knekt, og liten kløver til Wenches nier. Svein Harald kvittet seg med en spar. Wenche vred nå til ruter sju (ruter knekt er korrekt, men det spilte ingen rolle slik det sitter) som ble sluppet til damen. Ny ruter til knekten som sto, og ruter til Thor-Eriks ess. Sparavkast fra Øst og Syd. Thor-Erik spilte hjerter til tieren og esset, fulgt av kløver til håndens åtter. Svein Harald måtte kaste nok en spar, og sluttposisjonen ble:

♠ Q6 ♥ - ♦ 96 ♣ -	♠ 95 ♥ K6 ♦ - ♣ -		♠ KT ♥ Q7 ♦ - ♣ -
	♠ AJ7 ♥ 8 ♦ - ♣ -

Liten spar ble nå spilt mot bordet, og Svein Harald egget og gikk opp på kongen. Den fikk beholde stikket, og resten sto. Thor-Erik hadde sevsagt full telling, og visste at sparen satt to-to i diagramposisjonen.

Utspill ruter 9 til esset. Spar konge til esset og skift til liten hjerter. Opp på hjerter konge, to runder spar og fulgt av ruter til damen. Liten hjerter. Etter tenkepause la Syd liten og hjerter knekt beholdt stikken og følgende situasjon oppsto etter to runder ruter:

Etter å ha åpnet med en hjerter og gjenmeldt fargen, ender Syd i fire hjerter. Du spiller ut ruter knekt som blir dekket av damen, kongen og esset. Syd tar nå for spares, makker legger treeren (norsk fordeling), og fortsetter med hjerterseks. Hva gjør du nå? Gikk du opp med esset for å skifte til kløver før det forsvant noe stikk på KD i spar, ble du helt fortjent lurt av en smart spiller. Makers påkast på spares er nøkkelen, treeren må vise fem kort. Har du en makker som legger treeren fra 1097653, er det ikke mye du kan få utrettet i motspill.

CRYPTOLOGY AT THE GRIFFINS

"I'll have the other half," said the Hideous Hog.

Wondering how many halves made a whole, the waiter put down before him another dozen Colchesters. Swallowing oysters is an absorbing pastime and the Hog didn't say a word while the Rabbit and the Toucan, sitting opposite, discussed cryptological techniques.

"It's the in-thing," the Rabbit was saying, "and soon we'll all be carrying a second convention card and maybe a third, showing passive and active keys and no-one will know what we have or what to lead or . . ."

"But will we know ourselves?" broke in the Toucan anxiously. "Even now . . ."

"Of course we will," the Rabbit assured him.

"It's quite simple really. Suppose I bid one spade and you'd like to get to a slam. Well, you call three no-trumps which shows that you have either the ace or king of trumps. And now, if I have the other honour, I can either make a cue-bid or an inhibitory bid or an asking bid or a . . ."

"But how shall I know which it is?" asked T.T. bouncing giddily in his chair.

"You'll know because you'll have the key," replied R.R., bubbling over with enthusiasm. "Say I bid four clubs. With the king it's a cue-bid, with the ace it's a worthless doubleton. Having one of the honours you'll know that mine is the other, but the opponents, having neither, will be in the dark. And, of course, once the key is established you can use the same technique in many other situations. Responsive doubles, redoubles, simple and inverted raises, all can be encrypted. There's a Rosencrypt and a . . ."

A euphoric grunt proclaimed the end of the third half of the Colchesters.

With a troubled look the Toucan turned to the Hog. "You're not in favour of this new cult, are you H.H.?" he asked.

"Very much so," rejoined the Hog. "There are so few natural bids left these days that the artificial ones have become natural. Now they are being conscripted, as you call it, into artificial artificial bids, making confusion more confounded. Perhaps when chaos reigns supreme, the wheel will have turned full circle and order will at last emerge. Here's to Bedlam," the Hog raised his glass. Quickly emptying it and looking around for another, he went on to develop his theme.

"Bridge is a wonderful game because every bid and every play carries an inference. To interpret it calls for finesse, logic, psychology. But who wants artistry these days? Put on a strait-jacket, codify every bidding sequence, invent more ciphers, print bigger convention cards, substitute keys for common sense, and since you won't know what you have yourself, no-one else will know either."

"But surely, H.H.," protested R.R., "you of all people, so clever at deceiving opponents, should be glad to enlist partner's help if you can do it without fooling him."

Brushing partner aside as an irrelevancy, the Hog scribbled rapidly on the back of an envelope.

"Here's a key for you - if you can find it," he said, passing round the familiar diagram.

"North leads the three of spades. You insert dummy's nine and lose to South's ace. A trump comes back. Over to you."

The Rabbit pondered. The Toucan, his long nose aglow, swayed uneasily in his chair. For a while no-one said anything.

"Eureka! I have it," said the Rabbit at last, halfway through the asparagus. "I win in dummy, throw my club loser on the king of spades, ruff a spade, in case the queen drops, and reel off four trumps and the ace of clubs. My last four cards are the ♦ A K 8 6 while the dummy retains the ♠ J ♦ Q 4 and ♣ Q. If the diamonds are three-three there's no problem. If North has four, he's squeezed in spades and diamonds. If South has the long diamond, he's squeezed in the minors. Only if South has the diamonds, while North has the king of clubs and . . ."

"No, no," interjected the Hog, "North has the diamonds."

"Then," declared the Rabbit triumphantly, "I was right. My last trump forces him to unguard the diamonds or part with the queen of spades."

"How very clever," said T.T. admiringly.

The Hog filled in the other hands.

trick with the queen, a ruffing finesse against my ace would yield him two spade tricks. So I presented him with a key, so much better than dangling one before partner, and once he placed North with the queen of spades he had to play as you did. He had no alternative."

"Who was declarer?" asked R.R.

"Papa," said the Hog with a malevolent glint in his eye.

"And your poor partner?"

"You were," replied the Hog. "Last Wednesday I think it was. You were so intent on getting back the blue cards, after the packs had apparently been switched, that you didn't miss the queen of spades. But then you've lost keys before now, I believe."

A Key to the Trap Door

The perdrix à la financière provided a short respite. Then the Hog started scribbling again. "There you are," he said, passing round the diagram.

"North leads the knave of diamonds; find the key this time."

"Another Papa hand?" enquired the Owl.

"Both Papa and I were at the table," replied the Hog cryptically.

"On the face of it," said H.H., while we studied the hands, "there's really only one loser, a heart, but negotiating the clubs might pose a problem. Any ideas?"

The Owl hooted softly. The Toucan shook his head sadly.

"You ruff a third club, throw your losing heart on the king of diamonds, and at worst lose a trump," suggested R.R. hopefully.

"The third club might be overruffed," objected the Owl.

The Rabbit didn't expect to be overruffed and looked hurt.

"We'll start with the ace of spades, then the king of spades . . ." began O.O.

"On the ace North drops the queen," said the Hog.

The Owl blinked sagely and paused. Then the features of his heart-shaped face relaxed into a smile. "I believe I have the answer," he said. "The queen of spades is, of course, the key, and whether you or Papa sat West I believe that you played as I would do. After the ace of spades I cash two top clubs. All follow? Good. No high-low signals? That's suspicious, but no matter. If South has the ace of hearts, which is highly likely, since after that bidding sequence North would have led an ace had he had one . . ." The Owl looked enquiringly at the Hog.

"Certainly," H.H. nodded vigorously in assent. "South did have the ace of hearts."

"Then I'm home," went on the Owl. "I play a heart to his ace and if he returns a red card I have two discards in dummy for the clubs. If he has a club to lead back they either break or I can ruff it safely in dummy, and if he plays a trump I run it up to dummy's eight and again . . ."

"Again," broke in H.H., "you were presented with a key for the wrong hole. You grabbed it and promptly fell through the trap door. Yes, as you must have guessed by now, I was North." As he spoke the Hog filled in the diagram.

"An inspired defence," admitted the Owl. "How did you find it?"

"Think what a lucky hand it was for declarer," replied the Hog. "Both the black suits break evenly. No snags anywhere, and he didn't get a heart lead. Thirteen tricks for the taking. Fortunately, I could defend double dummy for every card was marked. The bidding showed eleven black cards; conceivably ten, but probably eleven. No void or he wouldn't have applied Blackwood. Knowing that left to his own devices he couldn't go wrong, I had nothing to lose in confusing the issue by dropping the queen of spades. No need of cryptomancy, no strain on partner, no . . ."

"Poor Papa," sighed the Owl.

"No, no," the Hog was quick to correct him. "Papa was dummy. It was Karapet who played the hand! He didn't mind being jeered at by Papa, who told him that my queen of spades wouldn't have deceived a backward child of six, but he was nearly in tears when I pointed out to him what a lucky distribution he had found. No-one had ever accused him of being lucky before. Did I know how many rubbers he had lost in a row? Had I heard what happened to him on Friday?"

The Hog was chuckling happily. Other people's misfortunes were so amusing.
